Khadi is symbolic of Swadeshi movement and has been front runner in establishing its robustness as fabric that is both empowering and modern in its interpretation. That's why khadi has found favor with the younger generation. The Khadi and village industries Commission is statutory body formed in April 1957 by the government of India, to promote, facilitate, organize and assist in the establishment and development of khadi and village industries. In 1918 Mahatma Gandhi used Khadi cloth as key part of swadeshi movement designed to boycott the use of important products and materials. Doing this would help to lift India out of poverty by creating industry and jobs locally.
